

“From one perspective the victory of Trump is an important step towards the victory of the Sunnis. The first step towards victory is the correct awareness about the reality of the battle. How much did we need to prove the fact that the Rawafid are allies of the US. But Trump summarized it in one video with the Lebanese Shia cleric Muhammad Al-Hajj Hassan. How much time did we need to explain to the Sunni media activists that the battle is not against the terrorists (Mujahideen) rather it is against the Sunnis and the Mujahideen who are their first line of defense. But Trump summarized it. The American politics did not change much. What changed is their tactic of war, from secretive to openly, and this good.

Obama relied on the logic of clearing the battle by targeting the leadership and Trump relies on profiting from wars and exploiting countries as if they are as cheap as rice. Perhaps the presidential victory of Trump will pave the way for bloody battles and intense chaos in which the Sunnis will not be the biggest losers, as they have reached a depth in which they do not have anything to lose anymore. Obama supports consensus and containment in the internal affairs of the US while Trump on the other end wants to shatter his opponents. May Allah increase their division.

The nuclear deal with Iran; the presidential victory of Trump; the enactment of JASTA; the presidential victory of Aoun Michel; Egypt holding joint military drills with Russia and negotiating oil deals with Iran; the Houthi campaign; Hizballah in Syria - are these facts not enough to stand with the Mujahideen? The reality of the Sunnis today and their heedlessness about what is happening around them with the Muslims reminds me of the invasion of the Tartars, the Sultans at that time were heedless until a maid killed one of them while he was dancing in front of him!”